The Fletcher Summer Institute for the Advanced Study of Nonviolent Conflict (FSI) is the only executive education program in the advanced, inter-disciplinary study of nonviolent conflict and civil resistance.

Since 2011, the Arab Spring and nonviolent movements for rights and democracy in Europe, Africa, Asia, the Americas and Oceania have seized the world's attention as never before. Campaigns for environmental justice in China, the rising of women in India against sexual violence, and struggles everywhere for indigenous rights are the latest manifestation of the turn to civil resistance as a way to demand and organize for change. This represents a profound global shift in how political power is developed and applied.

FSI is taught by leading international scholars, practitioners, organizers and activists from past and current struggles. It provides both a firm academic grasp of the subject of civil resistance as well as a practical understanding of the use of nonviolent struggle in a variety of conflicts for a wide range of goals.

Since its inception in 2006, over 350 participants from over 90 countries have come together to learn at FSI.

WHO SHOULD APPLY?

International professionals, journalists, policy analysts, civil society leaders, organizers of campaigns and movements, and scholars and educators.
