Strategies of civil resistance—utilizing strikes, boycotts, protest, and other nonviolent tactics—have enabled people to overcome oppression around the world. ICNC shares knowledge of these conflicts and supports original research about civil resistance to advance human rights, freedom, and justice.
OUR VISION

Winning Rights, Freedom and Justice

The premise of ICNC’s work is that oppressors and the populations they oppress are in a contest; and in that contest, skills and strategy can make the difference between victory and defeat. Circumstances are often challenging, but there are many cases where ordinary people using actions such as strikes, boycotts, mass demonstrations, acts of noncooperation, and other nonviolent tactics have defeated powerful and violent adversaries. Recent quantitative studies have further reinforced this finding.

The fact that dissidents are making the strategic choice for nonviolent civil resistance versus violent insurrection is good news. What’s needed is the educational infrastructure to support their growth. ICNC’s goal is to fill that demand.

Other vocations, such as medicine, engineering, teaching, and the military, all have a structured process of learning, mentorship, and support for the development and practice of relevant skills. They also have professional associations to meet and learn from each other. Each field further has a body of knowledge that is updated regularly with the latest research and shared with practitioners. Why should it be any different for nonviolent civil resistance?

With one of the toughest and most consequential jobs in the world, dissidents deserve our support. Research shows that civil resistance movements have an incomparably high chance of yielding democratic transitions, and can also achieve human rights, government and corporate accountability, and curtail corruption.

ICNC’s goal is to ensure that the most up-to-date, practical and relevant information is accessible to those who care about these causes, whether grassroots movements and campaigns, or the organizations and institutions that support them.

Dr. Peter Ackerman
FOUNDING CHAIR

“Research shows that civil resistance movements have an incomparably high chance of yielding democratic transitions.”

Hardy Merriman
PRESIDENT

“With one of the toughest and most consequential jobs in the world, dissidents deserve our support.”

ICNC Founding Chair

ICNC President
Developing and Sharing Knowledge and Resources on Civil Resistance

Civil resistance movements are capturing the world’s attention as never before. ICNC focuses on how these movements fight effectively and win. Our mission is educational. We develop and share knowledge and educational resources related to civil resistance with citizens and activists, scholars, educators, nongovernmental organizations, media professionals, and members of the policy community.

In response to requests from groups or individuals seeking to end oppression or injustice through nonviolent tactics, ICNC can assist with seminars, workshops, and educational events; and/or support general educational projects related to civil resistance. At the same time, we recognize that dissidents know their own context best, and thus we do not provide specific political or strategic advice to those contemplating or engaged in civil resistance. We also do not assist civil resistance actions or furnish funds to subsidize a movement’s operations.

INSIDE

4 Support for Scholars
Research, Publishing and Academic Initiatives

6 Teaching
Sharing Knowledge

8 Worldwide Reach
Support for Practitioners and Dissidents

10 ICNC in the World

12 Activist Education Grants
Supporting Civil Resistance Field Education

14 Papers + Publishing
ICNC Press and Blog

16 More Sources
Public Engagement

19 Analysis and Commentary
Media Sourcing

20 ICNC: Where We Are Going
An Ever-Expanding Field
ICNC supports

- Research and case studies on topics of relevance to practitioners
- The development and translation of educational materials such as films, books, articles, and videos—so that new insights on civil resistance can be shared globally
- In-person workshops and online educational opportunities for practitioners and scholars
- Small grants to dissidents who are promoting civil resistance education in their communities
- Networking opportunities to promote peer-to-peer knowledge-sharing and collaboration

CIVIL RESISTANCE

is a powerful way for people to fight for their rights, freedom, justice, and self-determination without the use of violence. It consists of:

Acts of Commission

in which people do things they are not supposed to do, not expected to do, or are forbidden to do. Examples: protest demonstrations, blockades, occupying buildings or public spaces, and acts of civil disobedience.

Acts of Omission

in which people don’t do things that they’re supposed to do, expected to do, or required to do. Examples: strikes, boycotts, work slowdowns, divestment and other acts of noncooperation.

A Combination of both acts of commission and of omission, such as creating and participating in alternative social, economic, and political institutions.

The field of civil resistance has developed enormously in recent years, driven by new quantitative and qualitative scholarly research as well as by current events. Whether approached as a distinct discipline or as an interdisciplinary topic, it is clear that civil resistance has come of age as a social science.

ICNC places special emphasis on supporting groundbreaking research on civil resistance. The projects we support yield major findings that can shape the field of civil resistance for years to come.

Ongoing Research

Our research agenda focuses on topics relevant to dissidents, scholars, and members of the NGO and policy communities. Examples include studies on how civil resistance movements can curtail corruption, drive democratic transitions, and cause repression to backfire, and extensive case accounts of recent and past movements.

We spearhead and fund major new studies such as the development of the first dataset comparing the dynamics and outcomes of nonviolent and violent campaigns. This led to the award-winning book, Why Civil Resistance Works by Erica Chenoweth and Maria Stephan. Now in its third iteration, the underlying data (known as the NAVCO dataset) also serves as the basis for further Ph.D. and scholarly research.

We are currently supporting the creation of an ongoing dataset collection on the role and impact of a wide range of external actors that support civil resistance movements around the world. We expect the findings to be game-changing, and to lead to actionable insights for practitioners in the future.

Maciej Bartkowski, Ph.D.
Senior Director for Education and Research

“Civil resistance scholarship shines a light on the long-ignored power of the people and rigorous research helps movements better plan and organize.”

ICNC Academic Initiative Goals

- Support groundbreaking research into the dynamics and strategies of civil resistance movements around the world.
- Build and share a body of knowledge about how campaigns of civil resistance can be more strategic and effective under highly adverse conditions.
- Bridge the scholar-practitioner divide by focusing on topics relevant to dissidents, NGOs, and the policy community.
- Disseminate significant new research, educational resources, and scholarly writing on civil resistance to diverse audiences.
- Promote the study and understanding of civil resistance among students and faculty worldwide.
- Foster interdisciplinary understanding, sharing, and collaboration among scholars.
ICNC provides several funding opportunities to develop classroom-based and online courses on civil resistance.

In addition to major new research, we also support emerging scholars through our Doctoral, Post-Doctoral and Junior Faculty Research Fellowships, which lead to promising new qualitative and quantitative analysis published in dissertations, books or journal articles.

ICNC’s research, teaching and writing initiatives are growing knowledge and capacity in the field of civil resistance.

To ensure that the latest insights are accessible to practitioners, ICNC further provides several research, writing and publishing opportunities to those who practice, study or are concerned with supporting civil resistance. Our peer-reviewed ICNC Monograph Series bridges the scholar-practitioner divide and shares research findings on topics ranging from civil resistance and international human rights law, to how civil resistance movements can maintain nonviolent discipline.

Periodically, ICNC also commissions Special Reports to address issues of specific interest to the larger policy community. Topics include advancing a new framework for integrating peacebuilding and civil resistance approaches to addressing conflict, critical findings about how mass killings can be reduced during popular uprisings, and the legal basis for external support to civil resistance movements (colloquially referred to as the “Right to Assist”).
Sharing Knowledge

ICNC’s Curriculum and Teaching Fellowships support development of classroom-based and online courses on civil resistance around the world. Since its inception, this popular program has expanded into multiple venues, including supporting many new university courses, high school classes and programming, and online courses for students and practitioners.

To further support teaching, ICNC also provides mentorship and intellectual support for instructors and course developers through its Academic Online Classroom, which offers an extensive collection of articles, studies, films, videos, essays and other resources on civil resistance.

From 2010–2016, ICNC shared knowledge about civil resistance and supported curriculum development by organizing and leading Academic Seminars at universities. These three-to-four-day, intensive sessions were held for faculty, graduate students, undergraduates, and members of civil society in 17 countries around the world. Subsequently we began partnering with select institutions to set up Regional Institutes on civil resistance.

From 2012 onward, we have also led a moderated online course on civil resistance in partnership with the International Institute for Peace at Rutgers University. The course has become highly popular, with many U.S.-based and international participants, who engage with the course material and collaborate in small groups on exercises and assignments contained in the curriculum.

Based on the success of our online ICNC-Rutgers course, we are now investing in expanding our online offerings by developing new courses, a new course platform, and a new mobile app to facilitate distance learning.
Spreading New Knowledge

To increase the accessibility and reach of new developments in the field, ICNC organizes free webinars, presented by civil resistance practitioners, researchers and thought leaders. These interactive, online sessions give the global community access to the latest scholarship, practice, wisdom and developments in the field.

In 2017, ICNC established its “Minds of the Movement” blog as another way to spread knowledge about new developments. It is a forum for activists, scholars, students, journalists, non-governmental organizations, and the policy community to share ideas about the study and practice of civil resistance.

> We share an array of civil resistance resources for free, including films, books, articles, videos, and translations of these educational resources in languages spoken around the world.

ICNC Academic Initiative Programs

- Regional Institutes
  In partnership with local organizations in key world regions, ICNC develops Regional Institutes on the study and practice of civil resistance

- Research & Academic Writing Support
  Groundbreaking research on civil resistance. Books, volumes, chapters and journal articles

- Doctoral, Post-Doctoral & Junior Faculty Research Fellowships
  Enabling prospective doctoral students, post-doctoral and non-tenured faculty to carry out research on civil resistance as part of their dissertation or book or journal article writing

- Monograph Series
  Publications that build on in-depth research and are written to reach both practitioners and scholarly audiences

- Special Reports Series
  Research and writing of shorter publications on civil resistance subjects that are relevant to a larger policy community

- Curriculum Fellowships
  Supporting the development of classroom-based and online courses on civil resistance for university students and professionals around the world

- High School Curriculum Fellowships
  Supporting high school educators who design and teach junior- or senior-level social science and history courses with a civil resistance component

- Online Courses
  In conjunction with the Rutgers International Institute for Peace at Rutgers University Graduate School

- Webinar Presentations
  Free series of online talks on critical ideas related to civil resistance

- Academic Online Curriculum
  Comprehensive online learning repository with video, films, readings, and other educational resources that are organized according to different topic areas and case studies

- Academic Seminars
  Free intensive, classroom-based seminars hosted by academic institutions
We study and analyze civil resistance around the world, including movements that are fighting for democratic rights, accountability and transparency, self-determination, and minority rights.

Worldwide Reach

Support for Practitioners and Dissidents

ICNC provides practical educational opportunities and relevant information about civil resistance to activists and organizers around the world. Our view is that nonviolent resistance can be analyzed as a social science. Practitioners can increase their chances of success by learning from each other as well as from cutting-edge scholarship on this topic.

There is neither a simple nor singular formula for success, but there are research findings, insights and general principles that increase the chances of success for movements and campaigns. We share knowledge about how people unify themselves, organize, mobilize, strategize, communicate, build coalitions, maintain nonviolent discipline, resist repression, and win against corrupt political, economic, and social systems. We draw examples from diverse movements around the world, including movements struggling for democratic rights, accountability and transparency (anti-corruption), self-determination, minority rights, women’s rights, indigenous and land rights, labor rights, environmental justice, and a variety of other causes.

Azaz Elshami

Manager of Global Field Initiatives

“ICNC Global Field Initiatives reach activists, organizers, the policy community and nongovernmental organizations across the globe.”
Researching

A WEALTH OF RESOURCES

Books, films, chapters, articles, studies, essays and interviews abound on ICNC’s comprehensive Resource Library. Most materials can be read and/or downloaded for free on our website. Many of the world’s languages are represented in the Library’s collection.

ON THE FRONT LINE

ICNC’s one-on-one interviews with some of the world’s most notable dissidents, movement leaders, and scholars provide insider perspectives on major and ongoing movements and the role of civil resistance in those movements.

MAPPING IT

ICNC collaborated substantially in the concept and design of the Nonviolent and Violent Campaigns Outcomes Data Project (NAVCO) and provided financial support for data collection and analysis. A project of the Síe Center at the University of Denver, NAVCO catalogues and analyzes major resistance campaigns that have occurred since 1900.

150 KEY TERMS from the field are defined and detailed in our guide of Key Terms in the Study and Translation of Civil Resistance.

Vladimir Kara-Murza
NOTED RUSSIAN DISSIDENT

I'm proud to be connected with ICNC and its work and, in my judgment, its work is the most critical work in my own country and in western civilization, period.

The Reverend James Lawson
U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER
ICNC in the World

Through workshops, seminars, institutes and other scheduled assemblages, ICNC directly educates thousands in countries on six continents.

ICNC Participants

Whether for a seminar, an online course, a university-based program, a field workshop or a Regional Institute, ICNC receives hundreds of applications each year from global citizens eager to strengthen their understanding of civil resistance strategies and how they can be most effectively applied.

LIN Fellows

From 2014 to 2016, ICNC’s Learning Initiatives Network (LIN) program supported the work of individuals and teams who are strongly committed to learning and sharing knowledge about civil resistance in their communities. The LIN program was a precursor to ICNC’s Activist Education Grants program.
ICNC provides practical and relevant information and educational opportunities about civil resistance to activists and organizers around the world.

Activist Education Grants

ICNC’s Activist Education Grants program helps civil resistance organizers and grassroots groups produce manuals, videos, and other educational materials, conduct workshops and share knowledge about movement organizing and civil resistance. These grants provide access to funds without elaborate administrative requirements.
We fund small, emerging grassroots groups, campaigns, or movements that have little or no access to traditional philanthropic organizations.

Activist Education Grants

Our Activist Education Grants support dissidents and organizers who are developing and sharing knowledge about civil resistance. Since 2014, this program and its predecessor, the ICNC Learning Initiatives Network (LIN) program, has supported work in 20 countries. Projects have included leading workshops, curriculum building, creation of manuals and books, production of videos and films, and opportunities for movement training, preparation, and skills-building. Our grants range from $2,500 to $20,000, and are renewable for up to three years.

We give priority to small, emerging grassroots groups, campaigns or movements that have little or no access to funding to traditional philanthropic organizations.

Many of our grant recipients are alumni of other ICNC programs, such as LIN, and are already highly experienced and engaged in movement and campaign organizing within their communities.
Workshops and Educational Opportunities
From 2006 to 2016, ICNC organized the annual ICNC Summer Institute for the Advanced Study of Nonviolent Conflict (previously named the Fletcher Summer Institute) with the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy (Tufts University). This unique program brought together 45-50 participants of diverse backgrounds from around the world for six days of immersive learning about civil resistance. To meet rising demand for this kind of program, in 2016, we made the decision to achieve greater scale by working to establish Regional Institutes on Civil Resistance in countries like Ecuador, Ukraine, and Nepal.

Led by ICNC’s Academic Initiatives staff and supported by ICNC’s Global Field Initiatives staff, Regional Institutes are partnerships between ICNC and academic and educational institutions in various parts of the world. Each is designed to deliver at least one, five-or-six-day classroom-based, interactive seminar for activists, organizers and educators per year. The Institutes offer structured hands-on learning on civic organizing and the dynamic of nonviolent struggle.

ICNC staff and partners have also responded to targeted requests from movements around the world to customize workshops on strategic planning and sharing cutting-edge insights and practices in the civil resistance field.

Translations
Every culture has its own unique traditions with respect to community organizing and its impact on the design of campaigns of civil resistance. We add to this knowledge by taking some of the best resources in English and making them globally accessible through our Translations Program, the world’s most systematic effort of its kind.

Through years of work, we have identified experienced translators and evaluators—many of whom are also activists—who are familiar with the specialized vocabulary of civil resistance and can be trusted to capture the meaning and purpose of the original materials. To further ensure quality, we developed a glossary of more than 150 key terms in civil resistance literature to aid understanding of English terms as they apply to the field.

In addition to our own translation efforts, we have spent years searching for existing translations of civil resistance resources, and linking to them on our website wherever possible. We now have the largest and most comprehensive online library of translated materials on civil resistance, with resources freely downloadable in more than 65 languages on our website.

What Gets Translated?
Generally, our criteria for choosing which resources to translate are:

- Demand for particular topics in a given language
- Availability of easily translatable resources on those topics
- Cost-efficiency, emphasizing multiple shorter-length resources over single, longer resources
- Appeal to general audiences and not just those who are already steeped in civil resistance studies

Resource Library
ICNC’s online Resource Library contains a vast and growing number of civil resistance resources in scores of languages.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Amharic</th>
<th>Italian</th>
<th>Portuguese (Brazilian)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Arabic</td>
<td>Japanese</td>
<td>Portuguese (Continental)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Armenian</td>
<td>Kannada</td>
<td>Russian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Azeri</td>
<td>Karen</td>
<td>Serbian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bangla</td>
<td>Khmer</td>
<td>Sindhi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belarusian</td>
<td>Kituba</td>
<td>Slovak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burmese</td>
<td>Korean</td>
<td>Spanish</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Catalan</td>
<td>Kyrgyz</td>
<td>Swahili</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chin</td>
<td>Latvian</td>
<td>Tagalog</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chinese</td>
<td>Lingala</td>
<td>Tamil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Croatian</td>
<td>Lithuanian</td>
<td>Telugu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dari</td>
<td>Macedonian</td>
<td>Thai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dhivehi</td>
<td>Malagasy</td>
<td>Tibetan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dutch</td>
<td>Malayalam</td>
<td>Tigrinya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Estonian</td>
<td>Mayan</td>
<td>Turkish</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Farsi</td>
<td>Mon</td>
<td>Ukrainian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French</td>
<td>Mongolian</td>
<td>Urdu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Georgian</td>
<td>Nepali</td>
<td>Uzbek</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German</td>
<td>Norwegian</td>
<td>Vietnamese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hebrew</td>
<td>Oromo</td>
<td>Xhosa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hindi</td>
<td>Pashto</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungarian</td>
<td>Polish</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Indonesian</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
We launched ICNC Press in 2015 to publish monographs and reports that bridge the gap between research and practice in the civil resistance community.

Minds of the Movement

ICNC's popular online forum attracts contributors and readers from all over the world who seek to share and learn ideas, insights, and experiences from the front lines of civil resistance. The stories, interviews and commentary on this popular blog reveal the underpinnings of particular developments and tactics. They highlight lessons learned and courses altered. And they convey implications for not only movements but also society at large.

While most of ICNC's blog contributors are familiar names and faces within the civil resistance community, we also identify and elevate new and important voices.

“Movement leaders announced early on that any person not complying with the rules of nonviolent discipline... could not be associated with it in any way.”

Lilit Makunts, Armenian Minister of Culture

In her post, “After Armenia’s Velvet Revolution, New Colors and Vibes in Country’s Politics and Society,” May 10, 2018
To support a vigorous exchange of views, Minds of the Movement blog posts do not necessarily reflect the opinions, policies, and practices of ICNC. Readers can expect a range of voices, topics, and approaches. The same can be said for Nonviolent Conflict News (NVCNews.org), an ICNC project that aggregates recent news articles on civil resistance from around the globe, serving as a one-stop destination for learning new developments in movements in diverse countries. Nonviolent Conflict News also welcomes submissions of relevant, previously published news stories, to be featured on our “Reader-Contributed Stories” section.

Together, Minds of the Movement and Nonviolent Conflict News keep readers up to date on the latest developments in civil resistance around the world.

— Amber French, “Minds of the Movement” Co-Editor

— Steve Chase, Manager of Academic Initiatives

“Research shows that a significant breakdown of nonviolent discipline in movements is strongly correlated with ineffectiveness and defeat.”

In his post, “Marketing Violence: A Closer Look at the ‘Diversity of Tactics’ Slogan,” August 7, 2017

— Steve Chase, Manager of Academic Initiatives

“The trigger for mobilizing came in January this year, when police killed a young Pashtun man of 27, who was arrested on unfounded allegations of involvement with terrorist groups.”

Ilam Khan, Pakistani scholar

In his post, “The PTM: A Nonviolent Movement for Protection of Pashtun Rights in Pakistan,” June 4, 2018
Public Engagement

It is incumbent on members of the policy community who care about human rights, democracy, freedom, and justice to understand how movements work; their historical record of inducing change; and when, how, and under what circumstances external actors can take actions that are helpful to movements.

Every year, ICNC organizes events that allow the policy community and the public at large to explore critical topics in the civil resistance field. Recent events include authors’ presentations and public discussions on people power movements and international human rights law; the integration of civil resistance and peacebuilding strategies; and the prevention of mass killings during popular uprisings.

We support research, informed discussions, and the development of resources about effective external assistance to nonviolent movements.
MULTIPURPOSE
Civil resistance has diverse purposes, including:

- Holding governments, corporations and other non-state actors accountable
- Achieving women’s rights, minority rights, indigenous rights, labor rights, and democratic rights
- Anti-corruption and transparency campaigns
- Quests for self-determination
  - Resisting foreign occupation
  - Campaigns for public and community safety and reducing deadly violence in conflict zones
- Environmental sustainability and conservation
- Land reform

REGIONAL INSTITUTES
ICNC partners with local organizations to host Regional Institutes, like this one in Quito, Ecuador. Scholars, activists and organizers apply to participate.
ICNC has built and cultivated close relationships with aspiring and seasoned scholars whose writing, research, or teaching advances the field of civil resistance studies. They form a vibrant community of academic advisors to ICNC, upon whom we rely for discriminating counsel and multi-disciplinary inquiry on the most pertinent research topics in our field.

“ICNC offered a great and valuable course about civil resistance. They didn’t skimp on the quantity and quality of the information they offered. It is really a great job they are doing in favor of humanity.”

Alba Purroy ICNC-RUTGERS ONLINE COURSE, 2017

CALLS FOR PROPOSALS
ICNC offers numerous support and learning opportunities with calls for:
- Webinar presentations
- Online course applicants
- Curriculum Development Fellowships
- Monograph proposals
- Doctoral, Post-doctoral, and Junior Faculty Research Fellowships

PROPS FOR NON-PROFITS
While ICNC’s mission is global, we also engage with activists and organizers in North America. For example, we organized the James Lawson Institute, an eight-day workshop on civil resistance and movement organizing, in 2013 and 2014.

GUIDANCE + COUNSEL
ICNC has built and cultivated close relationships with aspiring and seasoned scholars whose writing, research, or teaching advances the field of civil resistance studies. They form a vibrant community of academic advisors to ICNC, upon whom we rely for discriminating counsel and multi-disciplinary inquiry on the most pertinent research topics in our field.

100+
Lectures, interviews, panel discussions, and interviews are on ICNC’s YouTube channel.

Number of formal showings, worldwide, of ‘A Force More Powerful’ and ‘Bringing Down a Dictator,’ the two films that helped inspire ICNC’s creation.
As a pioneer in civil resistance research and education, ICNC recognizes that intrigue about civil resistance exists not only within the public at large but also among journalists, documentarians and other media professionals.

We provide expert analysis and commentary and share research, publications and other resources with media engaged in civil resistance reporting. In addition, ICNC extends educational opportunities to journalists through free webinars, public panel discussions and presentations, and online courses about the strategies, tactics, dynamics and outcomes of civil resistance movements across the globe.

Given media’s important obligation to the reading, viewing and listening public, we work with them to foster a clearer understanding of some basic truths about civil resistance:

1. People engaging in civil resistance often remain nonviolent for pragmatic, rather than philosophical, reasons.

2. Civil resistance campaigns and movements may employ a variety of methods. Famously, in 1973, sociologist Gene Sharp identified 198 methods that had been used throughout history. Many more have been identified since then. As such, civil resistance is not a synonym for protest, and civil resistance movements are not “protest movements.”

3. Effective civil resistance movements employ a strategy of increasing public mobilization and making the status quo costly, which leads to shifts and defections among the ranks of its opponents.

4. Civil resistance movements against governments have increased in frequency over the last two decades.

5. Civil resistance movements have a remarkable record of overcoming oppression. Data from past cases and award-winning scholarship show that these movements are at least twice as likely as violent campaigns to achieve their goals, and lead to vastly more democratic outcomes.

6. Civil resistance movements can succeed even in adverse conditions. Throughout history, organized, unified people have waged strategic nonviolent struggle in very challenging environments, against powerful opponents willing to use violence, and emerged victorious. A movement’s skill and strategic choice are major factors in its success or failure.
Where We Are Going

The most validating, and challenging, aspect of ICNC’s work since our founding has been keeping up with demand. Fortunately, as the field grows, so too do new opportunities to innovate and collaborate with others. Our future priorities are geared toward building the capacity of ICNC, but even more so toward building the field as a whole and the capacity of others around the world to lead and sustain their own independent efforts within it.

Through a record of sustained, cutting-edge research, training and knowledge-sharing, ICNC has become an established leader. Yet our goal has never been to command the field, rather it has been to plant seeds so that many efforts can grow. The foundations of our work are a passion for human rights and democratic governance, a strong dedication to our mission, a willingness to follow and trust the data and social science about what works, a commitment to ethics in our research and field work, and a collaborative mindset.

Our initiatives will continue to:

▷ Support and share cutting-edge research that is relevant to practitioners.

▷ Establish multiple week-long Regional Institutes with partners in diverse parts of the world, with the aim of each regional institute becoming self-standing and independent within three years.

▷ Develop new online courses, offered for free in multiple languages, to diverse audiences, including dissidents, journalists, and members of the NGO and policy communities.

▷ Educate other funders about why and how to support the field of civil resistance, with the goal of establishing jointly funded programs.

▷ Make innovative small grants to dissidents around the world to lead workshops and develop new educational materials for their particular context.

▷ Bridge the scholar-practitioner divide by promoting exchange between dissidents, academics, journalists and members of the policy community.

▷ Support teaching in the field of civil resistance in universities and secondary schools.

Our future priorities are geared toward building the capacity of ICNC, but even more so toward building the field as a whole and the capacity of others around the world to lead and sustain their own independent efforts within it.

As our programs develop, these attributes will remain the same. We will measure future success based on how well we serve the many courageous individuals and groups whom we now know, as well as those we will come to know in the months and years ahead.
5 Ways to Engage

Visit www.nonviolent-conflict.org

| 1 | Access our educational materials.
  Download, use, and share 550+ civil resistance materials, including films, book chapters, monographs, articles, training tools, and more in over 65 languages on our online Resource Library. |
| 2 | Enroll in an ICNC free online course about civil resistance.
  Successfully completing an online course is a way to engage directly with ICNC staff, advisors, and/or materials. |
| 3 | Join an ICNC webinar.
  Our regular webinars connect scholars, practitioners and movement leaders to an international audience at no charge. |
| 4 | Help spread the word about our programs on social media.
  Join our online community.
  Follow daily social media conversations about civil resistance, comment on new blog posts, and more by following ICNC on Twitter (@civilresistance) and Facebook (www.facebook.com/NonviolentConflict/). Get regular updates from Nonviolent Conflict News on Twitter (@nonviolentnews) and Facebook (www.facebook.com/NVCNews/). |
| 5 | Join our mailing list.
  Stay up to date on civil resistance movements around the world and specific ICNC programs, opportunities and deadlines. See “Stay in Touch” at the bottom of each page of our website. |